U. S. Shipbuilding Cost Now Closer To Foreign Rates

W. L. Marvin Says Difference Probably Will Not Exceed 25 Per Cent in Future; Praises American Builders

The cost of construction of vessels in American shipyards is now little more than in British plants, and probably will not be more than 25 per cent. Marvin, vice-president of the American Steamship Owners' Association, said yesterday.

Mr. Marvin said that when he declared before the Society of Naval Architects and Marine Engineers recently 'hat the difference was 40 per cent he referred specifically to conditions existing when the Roosevelt Merchant Marine Commission made its inquiry in 1904-'05. This situation probably will not exist again. In the address referred to he said:

"It is now possible to speak definitely and with authority as to the comparative coat of building ocean ships in America and in Europe. But it is true that ship owners who have made inquiry on the other side within recent months have found that British ship-yard prices were lower than American prices by at least a margin, due to the abnormal state of sterling exchange. On the other hand, the American yards could offer quicker completion and delivery, which in normal times is of fixelf a marked advantage. Altogether it probably will be found, when conditions in America and in Europe have again settled down, particularly with "firamp" cargo vessels, that foreign ship prices will remain lower than our own, though by a narrower margin than before."

"It is the general opinion of shipping efficials, as I find it, that American prices of shipbuilding will not here-siter be anything like 40 per cent greater than foreign prices—that the difference may not be more than 20 or 25 per cent," said Mr. Marvin yesterday. "American enhypards that have survived the post-war crisis are remarkably efficient institutions, and though be appeared to the content of the content of own, though by a narrower margin than before."

"It is the general opinion of shipping efficials, as I find it, that American prices of shipbuilding will not hereafter be anything like 40 per cent greater than foreign prices—that the difference may not be more than 20 or 25 per cent," said Mr. Marvin yesterday. "American shippards that have survived the post-war crisis are remarkably efficient institutions, and though they pay higher wages for their labor they enjoy and will continue to enjoy as substantial advantage in the cost of steel and timber. Even at somewhat higher costs, American building of American ships must be encouraged in the interest of national security and also in the broad interest of the American merchant marine."
